A number of voters are to accompany the nine. Windham still has a good chance for second place in the eastern division and intend to hold it.

Croquet, Alias Roque.

One of the oldest and simplest, and at the same time most exciting, of these games is croquet. Of recent years this game has been sublimated into the power by experts and christened "roque," but in this form it is hardly likely to be attempted by beginners. In brief, the game consists of knocking wooden balls with mallets through wickets around a fair sized lot. Each player has a ball of his own, and when one can hit the ball of another player with his ball, he has the privilege of knocking the other player's ball into the middle of the adjoining ten-acre lot or across the street. This knocks your opponent's calculations galley-west, and is the strong feature of the game. It gives more opportunity for the exercise of a mean disposition than college football and to enjoy the best effects of the game one should play with a fat, elderly lady who has a perpetual frown and a cynical laugh. In these circumstances two games will be sufficient to excite almost anyone to an energetic peevishness that will last a half a day.

As a pastime croquet belongs to the mid-Victorian era of antiquarianism. Bath buns, bustles and capacious side whiskers. Like these strange phenomena, it is accounted as obsolete by most up-to-date sportsmen, but it is still played with passionate zeal by many devotees. It is less exciting than pugilism and yet a faster game than English cricket, so doubtless it is admirably adapted to a certain type of mind. If the beginner in open air recreation finds croquet too exhilarating he should try cricket, or practice the puri and dropstitch specialties in knitting.—Providence Journal.

A Clergyman's Extravagance.

Dr. J. W. Stagg, a Presbyterian minister of Albion, is authority for the rash statement that "Roosevelt can put Taft in his pocket and never know he's there." Really, it appears that Dr. Stagg has never seen our little president.—Columbia (S. C.) Ledger.

Gaynor Did It.

When Mayor Gaynor of New York was invited to address the newspaper men assembled at the annual banquet of the Associated Press and the American Newspaper Publishers' association, he was told to speak freely and frankly. He did it. Plainer speech is not often heard in public. And his audience liked it. So did the people of the whole country, expecting W. R. Hearst and his associates. Every straightforward newspaper man—and that means most of them—believes that Mayor Gaynor was a completely sustained proves that most newspaper men heartily agree with and desire above all else fairness and conscience in their own ranks.—Boston Press.
